OGDEN FROM THE AIR.

This is how a portion of the bustness district of the city appears from an airplane at 1000 feet. At the bottom of the photograph, slight left of the center, the Standard-Examiner building is shown. The roof of W. H. Wright & Sons' store can also be seen. At the right a portion of Washington avenue is visible together with Twenty-third street and Hudson avenue. The photograph was taken Friday afternoon by Floyd A. Timmerman, a member of The Standard-Examiner staff from the Lincoln-Standard passenger airplane flown here from Denver by Eddie Brooks. Hit Air Pocket. The air was slightly rough as we climbed toward the south and the climbed toward the south and the plane jumped considerably as the wind rose and fell. A person can feel an air pocket at the mouth of Ogden canyon and as the plane rushes into the pocket it sinks rapidly, but begins climbing again as good air is reached. We reached 2000 feet as we neared the city and took several photographs from this height. We then dived to 500 feet and could plainly pick out the various buildings and stores.

C. D. Morse of the local forest offices, has returned from a trip to Big Piney. Rock Springs and Montpelier. He reports that the Standard timber company of Big Piney has all their landings broken in, and the rear of the log drives should be at the camp on Cottonwood creek now.

Thousands of feet of timber, to be used for ties by the Union Pacific company are being floated into the Green River. A big boom has been built across the river about haif a mile below Cottonwood creek, and will hold back the water until the logs can be driven to Green River and loaded upon cars.

Mr. Morse reports that cattle losses are not as heavy at present as was anticipated earlier in the season. The average loss on the upper Green river amounted to about 5 per cent, while the average loss at Star Valley average.

When it comes to decision

The men who are now developing powers of judgment will be the ones later on that will be called upon to make important decisions. Judgment is the foundation of leadership

Good judgment in clothes buying consists of giving due consideration to quality, style and wearability. Cost should be measured by length of service-not by initial price.

Dundee tailor-made suits fill these requirements to the Nth degree. They are bought by men of judgment. We are waiting for your decision with many new light weight fabrics. Priced at $30 and upwards.
